Institute of Directors, which has been influential in the formation of government atti-tudes toward the unions, Mr King said: "Before putting legislative measures before Parliament I would need to be convinced that they would be both workable and effective." The institute has been pressing him to take early action to outlaw strikes in essential public services and Mr King said he was considering the introduction of procedure agreements, breach of which by unions would deprive them of immunity from civil action under the law. He went ou: "I do not propose to repeat the experi-ence of the 1971 Industrial Relations Act when employers and unions simply decided that no legally enforceable agree-ments would be negotiated."

Mr King's relactance to rash through a fourth stage of trade union legislation, hot on the heels of the Bill now going through Parliament on secret ballots, will disappoint busi-ness leaders who have consist-cutly argued that the Government must not be seen to be going "soft" on the unions.

That disappointment was evident in the speech by Mr Walter Goldsmith, director general of the Institute of Directors, that British busine expected the Government to tackle the question of banning strikes in essential services "without undue delay".

Warning to nurses over pay body

By Our Health Services

The review body set up to recommend pay for Britain's 500,000 nurses, midwives and some other health workers may be able only to produce an interim report by next April, Sir John Greenborough, chairman of the review body said yesterday.

The promise of the review body played a key part in ending the eight-month long health service dispute in November last year, and narses oranizations have been bitterly critical of the government delay in setting up the review body.

Although Sir John, a former president of the Confederation of British Industry and former chairman of Shell UK, has been in office and working since September, the government has still to announce the other members of the review body.

Thomas, deputy secretary of the employers' body, the Local Authorities' Conditions of Ser-Sir John said yesterday that he hoped the remaining names would be announced "very first move towards negotiation in the dispute, which has led to 1,200 residential workers going shortly". But he gave a warning that the review body would be starting with "a blank sheet of and others maintaining an overtime and admissions ban which has closed many more paper", that the issues were extremely important and com-plex, and that it would be wrong to produce a rashed job.

However, with the help you can receive from the Energy Conservation Demonstration Projects Scheme, there's a lot you can do about controlling your energy use.

Since the scheme was set up we've advised many companies with similar problems. A couple of years ago, we helped Pilkington Brothers at their glass works.

In a nutshell, the melting of glass produces a lot of waste heat. Some obviously can't be reused because of pollution, but a considerable amount can.

What Pilkington did was to install a system that used the hot air that could be recycled, to heat their warehouse to prevent condensation from forming on the stored glass.

The estimated annual savings will enable the scheme to pay for itself in three years. Perhaps you could install a scheme on | ENERGY EFFICIENCY OFFICE VC

US troops come under fire again

OVERSEAS NEWS

From Christopher Thom St George's

Five United States soldiers came under fire while walking through a heavily wooded area in central Grenada, the American Army announced here yesterday. It was the first attack on US troops in four days and the fifth since the American invasion.

The soldiers, all technicians, vere walking along a track in the Grand Etang area when they noticed two men walking in the same direction 50 yards ahead. One of the soldiers noticed a concealed rifle carried by one of the men and shouted a warning. With that the two men spur round and opened fire with nifles.

The US Army said the technicians fired back with pistols and the men fled. There were no injuries on either side and no indication whether the men, both of whom wore idenocal blue shirts, were Cubans or Grenadians.

News of the attack was announced on the day that the miliatry also reported a substantial reduction in the mumber of combat troops in Grenada. In the last few days their numbers have been reduced from 2,300 to 1,900 and more will be moved out. All combat troops will have left by the December 23 deadline set by the White

Provda, marked the anniversary of Mr Yuri Andropov's first speech as party leader last year, but only mentioned his name once in

ignored the anniversary of Mr Andropov's election as party leader. The Communist Party newspaper published an article in memory of Mr Andropov's predecessor, Leonid Brezhnev, which criticized the slackness and inefficiency of the Brezhnev years but praised the former leader as an "outstanding figure" who had laid the basis for Soviet policies.

Yesterday's front page Pravda editorial recalled Mr Pravda editorial recalled Mr Andropov's promise at the November, 1982, Central Committee plenum to improve Soviet living standards. Submitting to pressure from the Government, President Eanes of Portugal yesterday reluctantly dismissed the Army Chief of Staff, General Garcia dos Santos, His decision came four months after the Cabinet of Mario Soares had first asked for the general's dismissal.

General dos Santos, who is 47, played a prominent role in the army coup that restored democracy to Portugal in 1947. He was the last of the predominantly left-wing army officers who took part in it to retain a high active post in the armed forces.

He has been a strong supporter of Portugal's role in Nato, but has often publicly criticized the alliance partners for failing to give adequate material aid to the Portuguese

President Eanes had carlier armed forces squarely under the consulted General dos Santos order of the civilian Minister of and other general staff officers.

This test of strength between the President and the Soares Government is indicative of the tensions between them. It is also an indication of the struggle between the military hierarchy and the civilian politicians for control of the armed forces.

The tension has its basis in the fact that under the constitution the President and the government are elected separately. It's not altogether surprising, since the Fortune System 32:16 is not your average computer.

Whereas most micro computer hardware and software today is derived from the home/hobby computers of a few years ago, the Fortune System 32:16 was designed specifically for small to medium sized businesses, or departments of large companies.

Based on the highly successful Motorola MC68000 microprocessor chip, it looks like a micro, is as easy to use as a micro, and costs a typically micro price. Yet it behaves more like a minicomputer. The operating system it uses, for example, is UNIX, the powerful and internationally accepted system normally found only on large computer systems.

It's a genuine multi-user computer. Your first workstation can be easily expanded to a number of workstations complete with multiple printers. All users are supported with up to 1 megabyte of main memory, 31 megabytes. internal disk storage, and a range of built-in expansion options.

There's also a stand alone executive

It can communicate with other terminals, minicomputers or mainframes, locally or remotely, as well as supporting a wide range of advanced programming languages such as Cobol, Fortran, Basic and Pascal.

For business applications there's a range of well-proven software packages for accounting, database management, financial modelling and forecasting. In addition, the keyboard features a large number of dedicated function keys for word processing. Fortune: Word is already recognised as one of the most comprehensive yet simple to use W.P. packages on the market.

Design for high living

Georgina Howell meets David Minaric, one of Britain's leading interior designers, a perfectionist who believes that decoration should become an integral part of the building

For a designer who never aims at grandeur, David Mlinaric decorates an awful lot of palaces. He is at the moment at work on the British embassy in Paris, a first category monument and the residence of Napoleon's sister. Pauline Borghese, until the Duke of Wellington bought it complete with contents soon after Waterloo. In London he is redecorating the magnificent Aspinall Curzon House Club before beginning work in the Brussels embassy, an eighteenth entury court house remodelled stween the wars and filled with mported Viennese rococo.

One of Britain's leading interior signers, he is also a frequent adviser the National Trust, and produces rden furniture with the Duchess of evonshire from Paxton's workshop : Chatsworth. He already has so much ork under way for 1984 that he could raly fit your Queen Anne hunting box r Park Lane flat into his schedule with ifficulty. Even if you were prepared to ait, and to pay, you might be isappointed. Several times over the ist few years David Mlinaric has been ummoned to country houses, and ven abroad, and having been dined mixing up a pot of paint to reconcile incompatible upholstery and curtains, or applying a coat of varnish to tone down a wall that is too bright - because he does not regard himself so much an arbiter of taste as an upbolder of architectural values. As Christopher Gibbs, antique furniture dealer and old friend, puts it. "He flays the room down to the bones. He is the antithesis of the interior decorator who enters a room and says, 'Magenta here, dear'."

On the other hand, if he takes your house on be will not rest until he has some French curtain-trimming 16 times before he was satisfied with the colour and weight.

Minaric made his name in the 1960s with work of a very different kind. Good at bold, quick effects, he was particularly successful with ingenious settings for dances, such as a Chinese pavillon in peacock blue fretwork with good lanterns, a masterpiece of battening, gauze and gold cardboard, or a bandstand of orange and yellow ribbons supported by matching gas-filled balloons. Caught up in the vortex of London life, he was soon decorating houses for Mick Jagger, George Harrison and Eric Clapton; he once advised a client to paint his entire flat in purple and lime green.

green. The son of a furrier who arrived in England before the First World War from Slovenia (later Yugoslavia), Mlinaric was educated at Downside, where he remembers admiring the fine Gothic lines of the nineteenth-century abbey church. His original intention was to be an architect, but after two terms he transferred to the Bartlett terms he transferred to the Bartlett School of Decoration where he was taught on the "good old Beaux Arts principle" of seeing through drawing.

He began by removing acres of gold paint or six months we drew an elevation of three columns of the Parthenon measured to scale and coloured with Chinese ink washes. When we had got that right, we moved on." Three years later he took his portfolio, complete with the last school project, a and wined and taken all over the house has finally said, "Leave it as it is." It is not unusual for him to reduce the commission to a single contribution – ironically since Mlinaric was to step into John Fowler's shoes as National Trust adviser when he died in 1977. He was taken on as office boy at Michael Inchbald, where he extended a two-month trial into two years before leaving the country to spend six months measuring and drawing build-ings in Rome. When he ran out of money in Paris on the way home he had to go to the British embassy for belp and found himself examining with interest the outside of the building he would redecorate 20 years later. "When I got back to Victoria Station

One job well done led to another, eventually to his first important house, Millichope Park, an 1830 Greek Revival house in Shropshire which had been a school and now needed to be tailored to the requirements of a young family. The finished bouse was seen by Country Life's architectural writer, historian John Cornforth, who was impressed by the way David Mlinaric had used paint to stress the architectural values of the great hall, and was instrumental in bringing him to the attention of the National Trust.

The Trust commissions began with Beningbrough Hall in Yorkshire, a handsome eighteenth-century bouse that had survived virtually intact and was being prepared to receive the National Portrait Gallery loan of a fine collection of portraits. Mlinaric stepped in at an early stage after John Fowler's death, and began by removing acres of gold paint from the Great Hall, and stripping 150 years of paint from the columns. "It seemed that the simpler it was, the better it looked". Most of Mlinaric's clients today are the well-heeled British, America and French, which has given him a certain insight into the difference between the

Their clothes are equally trim, but ooe suspects that a Mrs Regan is more interested in the straightness of ber hem than the fabric."

The French, he says, are the most stylish of all. Their drawing rooms are the grandest: "It would be unthinkable to find the children jumping on the sofa or a dog lying in front of the fire." The lifestyle of both nationalities, he says, require enormous effort and can be a tyranny. The British are genuinely envied for their comfortable, undemanding, sometimes rather down-st-heel way of life. "We love sash windows, turned bannisters and moulded panel doors. This must be the only country where even architects prefer to live in Victorian houses."

His own family are just an open door away from his present office, a Cheisea studio with a gallery and g dark green fireplace, and any of his enough skilled people, although you phone. The portrait that hangs over the fire is by Rex Whistler of Mrs at Curzon House the other day Mlinaric's mother, Angela Dudley alongside bricklayers, painters, gilders Ward, later Lady Laycock, and her and plasterers, I Suddenly realised that sister Penelope.

of a building and its present purpose. Embassies, he says, are working houses, not museum pieces to be judged by their historical accuracy. In Washington, where the embassy is a Lutyens house, he decorated the drawing room for the then ambassa-dress, Lady Henderson. "My first response to a Lutyens is to be very calm and quist But as the more way caim and quiet. But as the room was used for shaking hands before dinner with an enormous number of guests, we treated it in a different way and made it as warm, light and welcoming as possible."

In Paris, on the other hand, the accuracy of the Empire decoration was the point. "It is on a par with the decoration you can see at Compiègne, Malmaison, Fontainebleau and the German embassy so carefully restored after the war. It was a tightly defined style with a life of only 14 years. Madame Recamier would have had it, a nobleman living in the Auvergne would not." After months of careful detective work, Minaric and John Cornforth, who now reappeared as the Foreign Office's consultant on historic buildings, discovered that the loom and jacquard for the correct Empire demask still existed in England and were able to recreate the wall hangings for the Salon Rouge. Apart from the obvious difference between working on an embassy and a private home, Mlinaric found that the embassy meant mountains of paperwork. "The Property Services Agency operate their formula whether you are doing up a palace of a police station. Why should we be any different? For chrome taps read gold leaf."

'I'm beginning to believe in the craft revival'

e is concerned for the grammar and vocabulary of architecture which has almost disappeared, and believes that most people can sense an anomaly even if they can't identify it. "For instance, there's a very eighteenth-century building good under the flyover at Hammersmith which is a bus station. Good English baroque with two great garage doors bashed in it for the buses. Anyone could see that the elevation was wrong even if they didn't know how it was meant to be." If we lack an indigenous progressive style, he says, it is because of our disregard for the old architectural values, and the arrogant assump-tion that we can leap blind into the future.

Nevertheless, he views the post-Conran world with confidence. "The new generation takes an enormous interest in design although they can't afford quality, which has become today's great luxury. They are bored with The Real Thing - termonth tile with The Real Thing - terracotta tiles on the floor, scrubbed pine tables and earthenware bread crocks. They want cheap, effective glamour: Jocasta Innes' Paint Magic, swag curtains in calico. As usual, the retailers are far behind the customers and the designers."

At his own rarified level of decoration, he says:

The rest of the Sports News Ex-king Geoffrey I of Yorkshire wa ant in exile today that he would be back, even after the bloodless coup that deposed him while he was on a state visit to South Africa. Wild rumours are flying round Yorkshire as to the health of ailing statesman Yuri Boycott, who has not been seen in public since sensational reports of his dismissal first started two months ago. The problem now was to build a vehicle around the 34,000-hp engine eight times as powerful as Bluebird, with a 650 mph capability.

Unqualified to design it himself, and with no money to advertise, Noble put out a press release: "Sit. vac., 650mph car designer", and received 160 replies. Eventually John Ackroyd began work in an "office" rented for £5 a week in a derelict house. Hospital Capital Corporation. who owns the Portland, has been bold in entering this field. Along with special care. the Portland offers nconatal intensive care ("nconatal" describes a baby under 28 days old). a branch of medicine in which astonishing advances have been made in the past two years.

Unfortunately, although this is one area in which the NHS cuts have not yet bitten deep, even large London teaching hospitals are aircady turning away babies who might otherwise be saved. St Thomas's SCBU cannot admit babies one day in three and those at Guys and University College Hospi-tal are so understaffed that they are operating at two-thirds capacity.

Some NHS consultants voice grave doubts about the private sector's ability to cope with such specialized treatment. But since pregnancy complications are covered by bealth schemes and one in 10 babies born after difficulties in labour needs immediate life support. it would seem to make sense to many people with insurance to go to the Portland, where they offer SCBU alongside the comforts of a hotel.

Victor and Jenny Schwable wables was that they also owed £583 certainly thought so. They are a of the £4,025 the bospital had young middle-class couple who claimed for care. When Victor acquired BUPA cover in a way which is becoming increasingly typical - Victor's firm offers medical insurance on the London scale as an employee "perk". When it became clear that Jenny's second pregnancy would be difficult, her consultant synaecologist suggested the Portland because the baby would almost certainly need special care. On August 20 this year Laura Schwable was born. Three months premature, and weighing just over the life special care and set of the set the los, she went straight into an incubator in the new unit. A few days later she had heart surgery. While the parents agonized over Laura's struggle for life, the hospital administration woke up to an appalling situation it should have foreseen: the exceptionally tiny baby was so ill that her only chance of survival lay in months of the most specialized nursing. A large proportion of the massive cost would be incurred by items which BUPA specifically excludes from claims. Within a couple of weeks of the birth, the Portland sent BUPA a bill for £4,205 to cover bospital care. On September 10, Victor Schwable sent BUPA a bill be bad paid for the birth itself: £1,180. He then paid and sent off more bills, totalling £1,010, for the surgeon's fee for the heart operation and further care, BUPA normally claims to turn hills around within 48 hours but it was not until October 10, exactly a month after he had sent off the first one, that Victor Schwable learned from them that be was liable for nearly £1,000 of the expenditure claimed. There was a shortfall of £345 on the bill for the birth (BUPA disputed the charge) but what really alarmed the Sch-phoned the local BUPA branch manager he was told that this was the sum by which the hospital's initial bill had exceeded BUPA's total annual limit of £330 for "diagnostic and paramedical services". The amount of £583 was simply the first instalment in one category of charges that would be the parents' sole responsibility from then on.

At this point, little Laura had a relapse and the Schwables, who had borne the strain well up to now, became temporarily distraught. So it was not antil October 14 that Victor, confused, upset and angry, con-fronted Ron Staker, chief executive at the Portland, and demanded an explanation of his liabilities to date.

Mr Staker did not want to alarm him. Everyone at the hospital was anxious about the baby. Laura's consultant, Or David Harvey, had said he did not want the parents to worry about money. Harvey, who dresses elegantly and drives a black Porsche, heads the medical advisory committee at the Portland and runs a private practice which includes among the patients Prince William and other royal babies. He is also consultant paediatrician at Queen Charlotte's and if anything had gone wroog he would bave transferred Laura to the NHS.

At this meeting, according to Victor Schwable, Mr Staker pro-duced a photostat sheet detailing these items: pathology, radiology, ultrasound, X-rays and physiotherapy. Laura, in just eight weeks, bad needed £4,107 worth of care, some £3,777 over BUPA's annual limit

On October 19 Victor Schwable said that he simply couldn't believe that be would be expected to pay a bill of £4.000 to £5,000 so far.

Jenny and Victor Schwable with Laurel: can private health care cope?

But conversations with BUPA tals are completely unrealistic. It's a quarter of the real cost of treatment. confirmed the limit on diagnostic and paramedical services and also revealed that the Portland's £250-a-Not only are babies like Laura treated free, even adults aren't charged properly for the use of an operating theatre and the only charge for X-rays is the consultant's fee. They don't charge at all for medical and surgical items day basic charge for intensive care left a further shortfall of £579.60 a week. Consultants' fees, after BUPA's contribution, merely added another £40 in this weekly bill. Mr Schwable had failed to decipher BUPA's benefit terms and consumables." A potential hazard for private was only confused over the extent of bospitals now is that many recent advances in medicine look like good his cover for the consultant's fees. But it gradually became clear that business but the insurance comthe hospital was worried that BUPA panies, while publicly avowing commitment to all levels of private might ant cover the excess charges and even now the Portland's negotiations with the insurance companies are so inconclusive that health care, are incapable of coping with the bills. Any BUPA-owned bospital would have sent Laura (if it Mr Staker prefers to call them "discussions". In the event of BUPA could have found a space) to an NHS unit for intensive care. The capital investment required is so great that few private bospitals of not paying, the Schwables would have to be asked to contribute "what they can afford". any sort can match the public sector The problem facing Mr Staker and the Portland is that BUPA bases where serious illness is concerned. So a heavily weighted proportion of its top benefit plan on rates charged seriously ill patients are invisibly subsidized becaue they have to go private within the NHS. BUPA even by the London teaching bospitals. According to Mr Staker: "Charges for private patients in NHS hospioffers cash bonuses to subscribers who arrange to get NHS treatment

free. At the private Cromwell Hospital which offers exceptional facilities renal dialysis, renal and cardiac surgery, bonc marrow transplants (particularly expensive) and the only particularly expensive) and the only private radiotherapy unit in the country - the technical limits set by BUPA's top London Plan are simply ignored. As part of "a very good relationship", the Cromwell bas regularized the fairly widespread system whereby BUPA "doubles up" cover in serious cases. This would mean, for example, that the limit for baby Laura's diagnostic and paramedical charges rises from £330 to £660. Ron Slaker took it for granted that "doubling up" would apply to Laura, but it is not mentioned in the published details of benefits, and the BUPA branch manager told Victor Schwable quite clearly that £330 is as far as they go. The Cromwell sometimes approachs charities in desperate cases but, as it turned out, no such measures were needed to settle suggesting that the Portland send the baby in an incubator by ambulance to the NHS, agreed to make an open-ended commitment to total cover (excluding the bills which Victor had, perhaps foolishly, already paid).

The near 10 per cent of BUPA elaimants who currently find their bills are not met io full may be interested to know that these discretionary payments are commonplace. Persistence is needed to get through to Dr David Gullick at head office "I'm the tip of the iceberg") authorizing cheques for all sorts of things like outpatient psychiatric treatment and ambulance rides. "It is part of the BUPA pattern" that they currently spend about £1.75m, about 1 per cent of their budget, in this curiously ad hoc way.

When everything was finally settled, Jerry Williams, assistant general manager (operations) made an unsolicited phone call to make sure that the position was clear. He denied that BUPA is in financial trouble (although income barely outstripped payments in 1982) and denied the claim that the annual subscriptions are unrealistically low. He also denied that it is BUPA policy to avoid covering serious illness ["I believe that it is right that the private sector should be a standalone system and we ought to be able to provide the facilities for major surgery") and at the same time said that the payment for Laura Schwable would be made "ex gratia" and create no precedent for the future. "We've got now to sit down and work out a policy as to what we are going to do", he said, setting no time limit on decisions which should surely have been taken and made public before the Portland's SCBU opened in June.

And what about the Schwables? Laura weighs 31b 7oz, can almost breathe on ber own now and as soon as she reaches 51b her parents can take her home. They have no complaints about the bospital at all. Jenny Schwable is still hoping for a boy and she would like to have him Laura Schwable's bill. BUPA, after at the Portland if she can.

She also believes in the Marks tradition of using money for the benefit of others. Today she is orginiqing a reception in London for the Blond McIndoe Centre for Medical Research at which Queen Mother, as patron, will be present. The centre, inspired by the work of Sir Archibald McIndoe, a pioncer in plastic surgery, was set up at East Grinstead 25 years ago by Elaine Blond and her husband, the late Neville Blond.

There have been many and various causes over the years - from belping to run a family planning clinic in the 1930s, to dealing with outbreaks of artistic temperament when her busband become chairman of the English Stage Company at the Royal Court.

They are not causes you would immediately associate with Mrs Blond at first meeting. The door of her flat is opened silently by a maid in a black uniform and the visitor immediately sinks ankle-deep into the pile carpet. Ten yards on, at the other end of the hall, a manscrvant is there to usher visitors through a door to Mrs Blond's second sittineroom.

Being 81 years of age has not hindered her social timetable. After our interview she was off to have dinner with ber stepson, Anthony Blond, the publisher. The next evening she was entertaining 12 to dinner. No falling back on Marks & Spencer disbes, either, excellent though she thinks they are, as she has her own cook.

If it is a case of social life versus causes, however, the causes win. The Blond McIndoe Centre is very close to ber heart. She and Neville met Sir Archibald McIndoe when they first made their home in East Grinstead their East Grinstead bouse to pilots injured in the Battle of Britain, the men whom McIndoe called his "guinca-pigs" in his early work on skin grafting.

"I used to have friends down for the weekend", Mrs Blond said. "We had a buge diningroom and I always arranged for the boys who were well enough to join us for dinner. A lot of friends found it very difficult to take, and the choice sometimes came between friends and the boys, so I had to give up some of my friends. "Archibald McIndoe was a marvellous man, because apart from being a great surgeon, be was terribly good at keeping up people's courage and making them accept what had happened to them. Neville got the centre off the ground, and the Medical Research Council has been quite generous, but we could no: keep going without private donations.

Mrs Blond became involved her first major cause after ber first marriage at the age of 22. Sbe campaigned for family planning, along with Dr Edith Summerskill. and helped to open a clinic in Manchester where her family lived.

"I beld a big meeting in the playroom of our bome. Three of us, including myself, were pregnant at the time. We didn't think of it as birth control, but as family planning. and I wish they would go back to calling it that. We opened the first clinic in the city and I think we were pretty brave. There was a lot of opposition and every time we went there we had to be protected by the police.

"A lot of people were against my being involved. I certainly would not have been allowed to do it if I hadn't already been married, having my own children. It was still necessary to explain the principle behind it - spacing your family and having the children when you wanted them. It was all quite different from nowadays." Asked why she became involved in these causes, the answer is crisp. "I became involved in family planning because I believed in it. Marks & Spencer has always thought of the welfare of people; I am a member of that family, and was brought up with that philosophy. My father, who died when I was three, looked after other people before he looked after himself. I don't think one needs to look for a motivation for doing good, only for doing evil." She is joint president of the Britisb Committee of the Women's International Zionist Organization, which runs welfare and educational establishments throughout Israel and, more unconventionally, president of the English Stage Company at the Royal Court. Her second husband, Nevill Blond - a Manester businessman who became a chief government adviser on translanuc trade - was the Court's first chairman.

"I don't always like their chnice but we are there to put on peculiar plays, let's face it. If it hadn't been for my busband, John Osborne would not bave had a chance. His first play, Look Back in Anger, had been rejected by the other theatrical managements. I could never get over the fact that Neville was so patient with all of them. I would have murdered them, and I could never get over the way those directors nearly came to blows. The only time I ever interfered, though, was when members of the artistic committee were at our home discussing The Entertainer. They were against putting on the play, despite Lau-rence Olivier wanting to play in it, and I said: You're all raving mad. If you can get Olivier into your theatre, take it.' I think I did finally push them over."

No doubt Mrs Blond will be playing a part in the Marks & Spencer centenary celebrations next year. The centenary, in true Marks style, will be commemorated by each store in the country making i contribution to a local charity or cause.

hysteria can be stemmed no more. It will not be long now before advent calendars stand prematurely unpicked on the mantlepiece and sad little drifts of acrosol darken the windows. Yet there is a more serious seasonal problem before us, namely the ambiguity of the religious lyric.

"Hulloed by thy name" is easy enough to accept as being a greeting to the Lord: but how do you explain the location of Orientar, where Weethrie Kings come from? Or the identity of Gloria, until now just another girl in my daughter's class? Why is everyone planning to sing a song about ber, and why has ber surname become Hozannarinexchelsea? And why is the night suddenly boley? No simple answers.

My horrible lawyer friend Parvis Maitland says I am mad to have had three children within five years. Whenever he says things like this, as he does frequently. I am always waiting for some wounding pay-off line, knowing the legal mind to be a subile gimlet. "Why did you not go the whole hog and have five?" would be a sypical coda

Instead, what do I get when I bump into him at the shops but the following: "My wife and I would be delighted to come and have dinner with you on Saturday." Before I can say "But you haven't been invited" (true), or "Sadly we dine that night with the Wellesleys at Le Gavroche" (not strictly the case), he says "Ciao!" and casts one of those pruriem "poor little chap" looks at the baby in the pram, which his trade does so well.

Thoroughly modern pudding

Will the recipe work with margarine? That was the question oumerous readers asked when I substituted butter for the more usual suct in last year's Christmas pudding. Of course there is no reason wby it should not But the obvious question then is, why put fat in the pudding at all? So I made a fatless pudding, using wholemeal breadcrumbs too instead of white ones, and it really was rather good

How good depends on the strength of your views on what the ideal Christmas pudding sbould look, smell and taste like. Minc looks dark, full of plump, glistening fruit, and not too solid. It smells very fruity, slightly spicy and discernably alcoholic. And it tastes as rich as it looks because all the ingredients are the best I can find or afford. It is well worth the bother of searching out muscatel raisins and even stoning them by hand if necessary. It pays dividends to grind fresh spices, or at least to check that they are not old and 55g (202) roughly chopped nuts, stale. A mutual admiration society has blossomed between Sir Gcoffrey Howe and the Conservative MP for Ealing North, Harry Greenway, in their roles as tie designers. The Foreign Secretary was seen admiring Greenway's latest creation – a royal blue tie with a gold horse motif designed for the London Schools Horse Society, which Greenway founded in 1964. Greenway then complimented Howe on his own darker hlue number, decorated with small red models of London Bridge and the initials CFMM. The tie was designed by Howe wheo he was Chaocellor for the 1982 Common-wealth Finance Ministers' Meeting in London, and ran into an edition of 100. As top tiemen, both Howe and Greenway are trailing a loog way behind Roy Mason, Labour MP for Barnsley Central, who takes the designing seriously enough to have his own label. During his stint at the Ministry of Defence, he created a wonderful tie which incorporated anchors, wings and crossed swords. The tic was so popular that 12,000 of them were manufactured.

Up to the time of Traffic in Towns it had been received doctrine among engineers that if a bypass were to succeed in its purpose of relieving an area of unwarted webicles it had to area of unwanted vehicles it had to be "attractive to traffic", that is, it should not be a loog, circuitous diversion but should run as closely parallel to the old road as possible. Otherwise it would not be used. But. we argued, if you made the old road positively unattractive to traffic by meaos of a barrier, or a pinch-point, or a unil, traffic would have to use the bypass and there would be no need to align the bypass on the shortest route.

Sceking an example, we hit on the notorious controversy at Oxford over plans to relieve The High from the heavy traffic so damaging to the character of this famous street. Numerous schemes had been coosidered over the years including one - surely the ultimate io terms of attraction to traffic - which followed the line of the Broad Walk south of Merton and Christ church. At the time we were writing Traffic in Towns, however, the city council had decided to favour of a slightly circuitous route through Christchurch Meadow. We were dismayed at the damage this would do the survival of rus in urbe, where cows still graze almost in the beart of the city.

So we decided to insert a veiled paragraph which, though not openly critcal of the council, for that would have been improper in an official report, would be read by the university authorities and give them new beart to challenge the scheme when it came before public inquiry. This is just what happened.

I would not claim for a moment that the rejection of the Meadow Road by the minister (Richard Crossman), after the inquiry, was solely the result of the application Traffic in Towns doctrine as expounded in my own evidence to the inspector. But the new way of looking at traffic problems - the refusal to accept that the free-flow of traffic by t e snortest route was al important, the insistence that regard be paid to the adverse effects of roads and traffic upon the surroundings - all this, I daresay, influenced the outcome. Why then, after all the effort, is there still a torrent of traffic in The High? It is not as bad as it might be, for Oxford has taken a number of steps which would do credit to our report - the complete ring road, the ban on beavy vehicles, the park-and-ride system, the closure of Commarket and Queeo Street to all hut huses and taxis, tight control of parking location and charges - but the fact remains that traffic io The High is considerable, as it is of course to far more damaging amounts io many a public that it really needed resolution.

It seems to be generally agreed that Traffic in Towns set people thicking in oew directions. Its main contribution undoubtedly was to identify the adverse effects of motor traffic - death and injury in accidents, noise and visual pollution - and to weld them together and present them as a major social problem of our time. We were high-minded to a degree about "the environment" as we called it, taking the term out of its older ecological context and applying it to human we really thought everyone would agree and that there would be rapid progress along the lines we sketched out for the amelioration of the worst effects of motor traffic. At the same time, no one could have accused us of neglecting the motor vehicle's role in citics. Perhaps that is why the report seemed to have immediate appeal to conservation lobbies as well as to motor transport organizations. Well, there is nothing wrong in being high-minded, but I think we misjudged the quirky, contrary way the public was to respond to our environia Dicadiogs.

contrariness comes in, it is one thing for people to remain more or less they are familiar with them, but if they scent a change in the wind, they rise in fury. All bell breaks out at the merest runnour that a new road - an urgently needed bypass, perhaps - is to be built near established houses. Yet, paradoxically, if the new road was there first and the houses were built later, they would sell like hot cakes. People may live happily along the North Circular, and local people

In London, for example, property values being what they are, I should doubt whether there is now the slightest chance of reviving the road proposals of the Greater London Development Plan as modified by Layfield but rashly abandoned by the GLC. Yet money is not the main stumbling block. As the root of it is our love - hate relationship with that likeable rogue, the motor vehicle. Traffic in Towns was dead accurate in predicting that nothing was going to check the appeal of the motor vehicle. We are bewilched by the rogue's company. to spare and an interest in the way in which the taxpayer and his money are easily parted, they could do worse than pop along to Committee Room 16 at the House of Committee this afternoon for the second session of the Public Accounts Committee's inquest into the de Lorean affair.

At this point I had better "declare an interest" - in the most literal sense. For I took an interest in the de Lorean affair from its inception. Quite simply, I tried to get it stopped. Needless to say I failed. For in these matters, as Madame du Deffand used to say, 'il n'y a que le premier pas qui coute" once Mr Roy Mason and his Northern Ireland Office had decided in the summer of 1978 to put the taxpayers behind Mr de Lorean and his wonder-car to the tune of £61m, we were in it, hook, line and sinker, to the bitter end. So I found the PAC's first hearing, on Monday afternoon, of peculiar poignancy. For the committee got straight down to the business of seeking to establish bow the Northern Ireland Office came to make that initial investment. It had make that minual investment. It had before it Mr Ken Bloomfield, now head of the Northern Ireland Economic Development Depart-ment, and formerly head of the Ulster Department of Commerce. and convincingly. It was true, explained Mr Bloomfield, that McKinsey (the department's own consultants) had taken a rather bearish view. But the de Lorean scheme had already been evaluated by two other eminently respectable American committencies, which had pronounced it a potential winner, and murmured (presumably as they took their fees) that anyone was at liberty to quote them to its support. Mc Kinsey, in short, took "the most downbeat view... taken by anybody at the time". It was also true that the Southern Lord Barnett) or their Tory successors, Messrs Atkins, Shaw and Butler, will take the stand. Yet these Irish had decided to withdraw. But Belfast did not know the reason -there had been talk of worries about bad industrial relations in Limerick, are matters with which Parliament surely ought to be concerned. Still, Mr Bloomfield has undoubtedly put his finger on how you go about it if you want to take the hapless British taxpayers for a where the Dublin government wanted de Lorean to go. At 6am, the sky still streaked with purple, Clive Harris, - a small ordinary-looking man in his early forties, mounts the altar of a church and summons up the infirm. On an average day he will touch perhaps $,000 people. Some of them will claim to have been cured, and others believe that their condition will improve for a number of months. There is an extraodinary revival in faith-healing, personal astrol-ogers, and mystics in this socialist Catholic country. It is no longer sufficient to divide the nation into those who explain the world according to the scientific laws of Marxism-Leninism and those who put their trust woolly in the divine will of God.

The wisdom of the countryside its superstitions, sprites, dybbuks, lemons, and secrets have never disappeared from the Polish conciousness. Two factors now appear to be at work, prodding relatively sophisticated people as well as peasants back to the folk truths.

One is the sapping of confidence in the national bealth service and its doctors. Working 16-hour days with poor equipment and limited anaesthetic in old-fashioned, unhygienic premises, it is little wonder that the The Englishman with Poland in the palm of his hand doctors cannot meet people's expectations. A country GP reckons to have at best nine minutes for each examination, during which the patient has to strip, be examined and diagnosed and get dressed again. The second factor is that country priests, especially the younger generation, are more sophisticated than in the past - men with elaborate political opinions (usually with Solidarity sympathics), who read the newspapers and think about economics and what is wrong with the country. In their daily dealings to the parisb they are concerned with power - persuading the village schoolteacher or a local farmer to make premises available for religious teaching, or touting for contributions to special welfare funds - rather than with the eternal mysteries. Into this gap the faith-healer has jumped. In Gdynia, one faith-healer actually seems to cultivate a witchlike appearance. One reason Harris is trusted more than other healers is that he does not from the tour. While many of the Polish healers have managed to obtain fast cars, Harris comes with a simple suitcase, stays at private homes, and performs in a simple open-necked shirt. How he lives when he leaves Poland nobody knows, and most people prefer to stay in ignorance.

Some priests and doctors as well the bardline Marxists remain predictably sceptical. The usual discussion about what is or what is not a cure, what is attributable to suggestion or crowd hysteria has been held in medical circles. But a large number of young, intelligent people who have watched him at close hand are convinced that Harris is transmitting some form of explanation might be feasible to some cases," says one, "but how does one explain the curing of a twoyear-old child, completely unaware of what is supposed to be happening? These things happen too often for it to be come kind of statistical coincidence.

Wherever the truth lies, the number of Poles who believe to the value of Harris and his healing now exceeds even the several hundred thousand who have been treated by him. Harris, though he may not like it, is the best-known Englishman to you know, it's for my daughter, they tell you, these unlikely Cossacks of the counter-revolution.

Every turn of the screw in the state sector, every appearance on television of the hubricious Nigel Lawson threatening further cuts, persuades them to cut and run.

As a parent of three children at state schools my first response, thinking of these braided defectors aod the kids they have left behind, is anger. When my children feel puzzled and betrayed, and their school's ability mix slips further away from the truly comprehensive, outrage is natural. But anger is not coough. When even people who would agree that the rationing of education by price is indefensible on moral grounds nevertheless opt out of the state system for perceived short-term self-interest, we have to ask why.

The comprehensive schools are caught in an impossible vice. As the Government's clamp on higher education tightens, so the middleclass parental nightmare increases. The percentage points at A level needed for university entry is being ratcheted up, year by year. These examinations, which already cast a shadow early in the comprehensive curriculum, loom ever more important, although they are designed to test only a small oumber of those at school. And the state schools are under-resourced. Their onistanding success, in that sector of their work, in jocreasing the overall number of examinatioo successes, is forgotten. The unseemly queue to register babies at birth, or to switch children later for a system which guarantees a force-fed elite education, grows 2DBCC.

Until now it has been the private sector. left untouched by successive Labour governments in their unwisdom, which has been the beneficiary of the attack on comprehensive education. The 175 remaining grammar schools in England were scattered shrinking, and often suffered in the falling share of real resources. Now, however, a new opponent of the comprehensives has entered the lists. Mr Robert Dunn, a hitherto obscure junior minister at the Department of Education and Science, has been calling on local education authorities to consider reintroducing a selective system. In the war against the comprehensives, Second Front Now is his slogan.

Thus far Mr Dunn's strike rate is not impressive. Urged on by his guru from the Department, Stuart Sexton, Solibull education authority proudly introduced a scheme for the reintroduction of IQ-based selection at 11, after nine years of a fully comprehensive system. It was a system which had achieved notable successes even to the comparatively range would "leave the comprehe sive system more or less un-changed." Conservative councillors to Soli-hull are clearly not streamed for ability, and their scheme has aroused ridicule and anger from teachers and parents alike. Next time, the comprehensive may not be so lucky.

Messrs Dunn and Sexton will also be heartened by the Gallup Poll last week which indicated that 61 per cent of those interviewed believed that selective schools are better able to draw out a child's exam potential. The poll, like the television dis-cussion which followed, was muddied, and did not spell out the consequences of selction at 11-plus. But it strikes a warning note for the defenders of the comprehensive. They will need to mount a vigorous counter-attack.

But the comprehensives have to fight on two fronts at a time of failing rolls. They have to reform the eurriculum to provide more for those pupils unsuited to tightly structured examinations, yet simultaneously prove that they can out-perform selective schools, in the face of persistent designation from the likes of Robert Dunn.

Paradoxically, their moment of maximum danger is also their moment of maximum opportunity. What Solihull showed is that there is an alliance in the making between teachers and pareots wherever comprehensives are threatened by the reintroduction of selection. Even if they are forced to become unpaid tax collectors for Sir Keith Joseph. many parents do respond to the cuts hy raising school funds themselves, though that may simply increase the differential between the comprehensives in the plush suburb and the rest. The real test for the Opposition is to mohilize the public concern about privatization in the campaign for the widest and best choice within the comprehensive system. That involves a commitment in detail to the priorities for funding which we tend not to hear four years from an clection.

If some people are entitled to access to the best on offer, why not all? How can this access be justified by the chequebook and the covenant, as it is now? A private sector designed to make the world safe for the Sloane Ranger looks less alluring on close inspection. But every inducement, direct and indirect, is put in its way by the present government.

Until those prep school boys, the internal emigres of out street, have been disgorged from their Volvos back into my children's school I cannot see the battle for those schools won. Their parents agree. They tell me they are abolitionists too. In principle, of course, you understand.

A FRONT LINE VOTE FOR CRUISE

West Germany has emitted two important signals over the past few days. First the Social Democrats formally repudiated the deployment of Pershing II and cruise missiles, thereby lurning against their own former Chancellor and their own policies while in government as well as opening a crack in the bipartisan consensus on security policy which has held for more than twenty years. Then yesterday the Bundestag, with a Christian Democratic majority, formally endorsed the deployment of the new missiles.

These two signals are only superficially contradictory. What they show is a country more divided and doubtful than it has been for some time yet still fundamentally loyal to the Western alliance. Even the Social Democrats have not repudiated Nato or adopted the neutralism of the fringe. They have said two things: that they do not believe these particular weapons enhance their security and that they do oot feel the Americans have made sufficient effort to negotiate an agreement at Geneva.

Yet it would be foolisb to pretend that they are not giving voice to broader doubts which reflect a change in the mood of the country. West Germany is in the very difficult position of being a major power in the front line of Western defence which is wholly dependent on a foreign power for its nuclear security. This was relatively easy to cope with as long as the United States enioved overwhelming nuclear superiority because the risk of challenge was low. With the rise of the Soviet Union to rough parity two types of doubt proportion of the Greens. This before the Alliance.

emerged: that the United States could be a perilous exercise but might not risk its own annihilation in defence of Europe, or, alternatively, that it might try to canfine a conflict to European territory. Placing new missiles in Europe was supposed to allay the first type of doubt hut has at the same time exacerbated the second.

A number of factors have contributed to this. One is certainly the loss of confidence io American leadership, especially among the young, over the past decade or so. The West Germans bave remained true to the policies of the mid 1960s, coordioated before Soviet behaviour in Czechoslovakia, Poland and Afghanistan. keeping contacts with the East in the hope of reducing tensions and maintaining openings to the people of East Germany. The deterioration in relations between the super powers has reduced allied support for the diplomatic track of West German policy while increasing fears that West Germany could become the helpless victim of a confrontation either in Europe or, more probably, in some other part of the world. Fusing with these comparatively rational fears has been a modest hut significant rise in support for the "Greens", who bring together a wide range of ecologists, idealists, romantics, pacifists and nationalists of left and right in general protest against so many aspects of modern life and the German situation that they are hard to disentangle. Many of the Social Democrats who voted against boping by doing so to scoop up a in general and the Social Democrats in particular. There are two main lessons to draw from the warning. One is that the central consensus in West German politics will not hold unless it is part of a Nato consensus on East-West relations. The other is that West Germany's growing self-confidence and distance from the Nazi period are increasingly difficult to reconcile with the present structure of Nato and in particular its reliance on American nuclear weapons, How the missiles last week were to adjust to this new reality is one of the most pressing tasks

The Agricultural Holdings Bill, which has just begun its committee stage in the House of Lords, was introduced by the minister as a Bill "to arrest the decline in the tenanted sector of aericulture". The ambition far exceeds the modesty of the than upwards, and thus a measure.

Your entire editorial is based not nn theology, nor even on a misunderstanding of theology, hut upon an enfected political philosophy which is Erastian in its intent to view the Church as a mere collection of separated beings who happen to possess similar views. Io say (feature, November 5) that the law has come out of the Nilsen case "looking a bit of a clodhopper." For that is exactly what the law on diminished responsibility is. The defence was developed as a device for circumventing the difficulties that flow from a mandatory penalty for murder. That penalty means that judges who senteoce sane murderers are unable to take even the most powerful miligating circumstances (such as severe mental illness) into the Country Landowners Association. The union agreed to let go the three-generation statutory tenancy which it had been keen on at the time of its introduction seven years ago. The association agreed to a new formula for arbitration at rent reviews for sitting tenants, which moves away from open market letting value (there no longer being anything answering that description) and towards the value of the productive capacity of the holding.

The introduction of the right of succession to tenancies in 1976 has not significantly altered the rate of decline in the number of rented boldings (about 3,000 a year). Perhaps the number of new lettings lost by the measure was roughly balanced by the number of unwillingly extended tenancies over land that would otherwise have been taken in hand. But there are strong a priori grounds and much anecdotal evidence for believing that the succession right would have its former state, even to keep it accelerated the decline of the landlord and tenant system in (it might not be sufficient) to the longer term. So its abolition make fundamental changes in for new tenancies, as provided in the tax position of private pression on a declining trend tary talent through management, that has been pronounced since share-farming and partnerships the end of the First World War. The Northfield committee (1979) reckoned that the rented sector would decline over the next 40 years from 35-40 per cent of all farm land to 20-25 per cent. And of the course the number of boldings within the total acreage dwindles even faster as profit dictates amalgamation of the smaller units. The decline of the landlord and tenant system of farm occupancy is regretted; rightly so, for it has served British agriculture well for most of its recorded history. It promotes an efficient division between and within two inputs, capital and managerial skill in husbandry. It has contributed to the social solidity of rural England. It has, less now than once, extended a means of entry into farming for capability allied to only moderate resources.

It is plain that to restore that form of tenure to anything like where it is, it would be necessary leading on in some cases to tenancies. There is room for the restricted reintroduction of term tenancies and for a retirement scheme that would pave the way for tenancies to be terminable at the age of 65. And the Government should have a much more positive policy towards statutory smallboldings. The financial squeeze on county councils tempts them to sell on vacancy. limiting still further the opportunities for beneficial occupation of agricultural land in a small way. Ministers have so far shown no enthusiasm for building on their Bill or doing anything that might disturh the limited NFU-CLA concordat. That agreement, they say, is the best insurance against repeal by a future Labour government. But interest groups can change their mind, as the NFU already has in this matter. and the legislature, bowever it may respect views of interest groups, is not, should not be, bound by them. There is much work to be done on the Bill of a kind the House of Lords is peculiarly fitted to do.

STILL A CULTURAL COMMITMENT

The English and Welsh now have such a cultural commitment to bome ownership, that, perhaps inevitably, renting in both public and private sectors sbould be considered a residual tenure. For council housing that is the conclusion to be drawn from the budgetary provisions announced in aggregate last week aod to be notified to local authorities in detail tomorrow. Capital spending by councils and bousing associations bas become a fiscal residual to be whittled away as a departmental offering to the Treasury to counteract the global "excess" of council spending. The state's assistance with bousing costs to the poor and those on low incomes was the one part of the welfare programme to be singled out for specific reductions: fairness and consistency are jettisoned as guiding principles.

There is, to be sure, a strong case for abandoning the preoccupations of the post-war interparty consensus on housing. It extolled scale, and beaped praise this very account. Mr Jenkin fruits of the government's enon ministers debyering buge says blandly that the private hancement of mortgage tax relief increases in the poblic housing stock with scant regard for either economic balance or tenants? interest. a lightness of touch; a willingness to become "entrepreneurial," intervening in the market to huy. re-furbish and sell, to provide for such groups as the elderly and handicapped for whom the private market has little to offer. But it would be wrong to extend this conception and write off public sector tenants who have not exercised their right to buy as an encumbrance.

It would be sbort-sighted, too. if policy were based on the present gross surplus of dwellings over households continuing unchanged into the future. The growth of single-person and single-parent households is rapid. In itself this is no recipe for large-scale construction, but it does point to increased demand (monetary or expressed in council waiting lists) later in the decade - demand which can only be accommodated hy a shake-out of the housing stock.

Yet the figures presented for 1984-85 show the government extraordinarily complacent on at the very moment when the sector will provide the bulk of are being eojoyed by owner "oew starts" (but bas he fully occupiers in the higher income worked out the town and and property bands. add, equally blandly, that there is enough money in the kitty to provide home improvement grants for private owners when the rate of deterioration in our ageing bousing stock will accelerate.

The fact is that during the past twelve months housing policy has exhibited a volatility that makes sensible planning of huilding and grant-giving im-possible. Capital outlays for next year are to be reduced although the windfall gains of capital receipts from the right to huy programme provide a soft eusbion. Twelve months ago the Treasury appeared - in its own ten year forward look at spending - to have accepted the hard evidence from the English House Conditions Survey of the need for a minimum and consistent level of public investment in the bousing stock: already the consistency has gone. What is difficult to justify is squeezing public sector tenants

the prohiem: two special defences to murder, provocation and abnnrmality of mind. These two circumstances are of course commoo factors in all sorts of crimes but, because of the mandatory penalty, the courts cannot take them into account in the sentencing of murder cases. So the 1957 Act elevated these two factors to a special status in murder proceedings, a status that changes one crime - murder - into anniher one - manslaughter. Manslaughter, of course, carries no mandatory penalty. In offences that have no manda-

There is, therefore, no subsidy. British Airways does have other foreign correacy borowings, which are not subject to Treasury cover against exchange risk, and full provision has been made in the accounts of British Airways for the subsequent currency changes on these.

On another point, while British Airways remains technically insolvent, its deficit at March 31, 1983, of £221m is now reduced to £59m as a result of profits earned after all charges in the half-year to September 30, 1983.

Medical applications of the technology lie several years in the future. Tiny electrodes could be implanted in the brain to deliver medicine for disorders such as Parkinson's disease or possibly schizo-phrenia; both are linked to the brain's dopamine system. For the last 20 years or more the British Army has been involved in many peace-keeping missions around the world.

ENDA RYMAN

وللتنابي والم

At this moment we have troops stationed in places as far flung as the Lebanon, Belize and Cyprus (in addition of course to the Army's well known task at home in support of the Royal Ulster Constabulary in Northern Ireland).

It's a rewarding task, certainly. Peace will always

You'll be confronted by a jungle terrain that will test your powers of physical endurance to the limit.

Moreover, in an area as volatile as Central America, the threat of trouble is never far away.

Quite a challenge 5,000 miles from home.

The British Army also has a force deployed in Cyprus, as part of the UN peace-keeping mission. We play an active role.

remain an ideal worth striving for.

Yet paradoxically, it is rarely achieved with good intentions and soothing words.

The harsh reality is that the maintenance of peace can often be a bloody affair.

And, as a young Army Officer, it can stretch your abilities almost to breaking point.

In the crossfire.

Six months after leaving Sandhurst, for example, you could find yourself in the middle of someone else's civil war.

In the Lebanon, perhaps.

Here, you could face as many as five or six political and religious factions, at war for very complex reasons.

In the struggle for peace, you may end up feeling you're nobody's friend and everybody's Aunt Sally.

You'll need all the talents of a skilled diplomat.

On occasions, you'll have to make a stand in the thick of the crossfire.

Would you have the courage and dogged determination to see the job through?

Closer to home, you could also spend some time in Northern Ireland.

Some members of the community there are opposed to our presence. A few of them violently so.

Yet there'll be no taking sides.

In the course of your duty, you and your men may be subjected to extremes of provocation.

Could you keep a tight rein on your emotions, even under fire?

Jungle warfare and social work.

In Belize, you could face a different challenge. Your job will be to police the borders.

As an Officer there, you could find yourself helping the local communities.

You might supervise the distribution of supplies to an isolated village or settle a quarrel about water.

You could mediate in a land dispute between farmers on the edges of the UN Buffer Zone.

How are your talents as an arbitrator?

A spell at Sandhurst.

Needless to say, we won't throw you in at the deep end.

Before you take your first steps as an Army Officer you'll undergo a rigorous training period at Sandhurst.

First of all, we'll put your body through a punishing course in physical fitness.

Then we'll tax your brain.

You'll study social science and international affairs. Gain a grounding in military law and theories of government.

And most important of all, learn the skills of leadership.

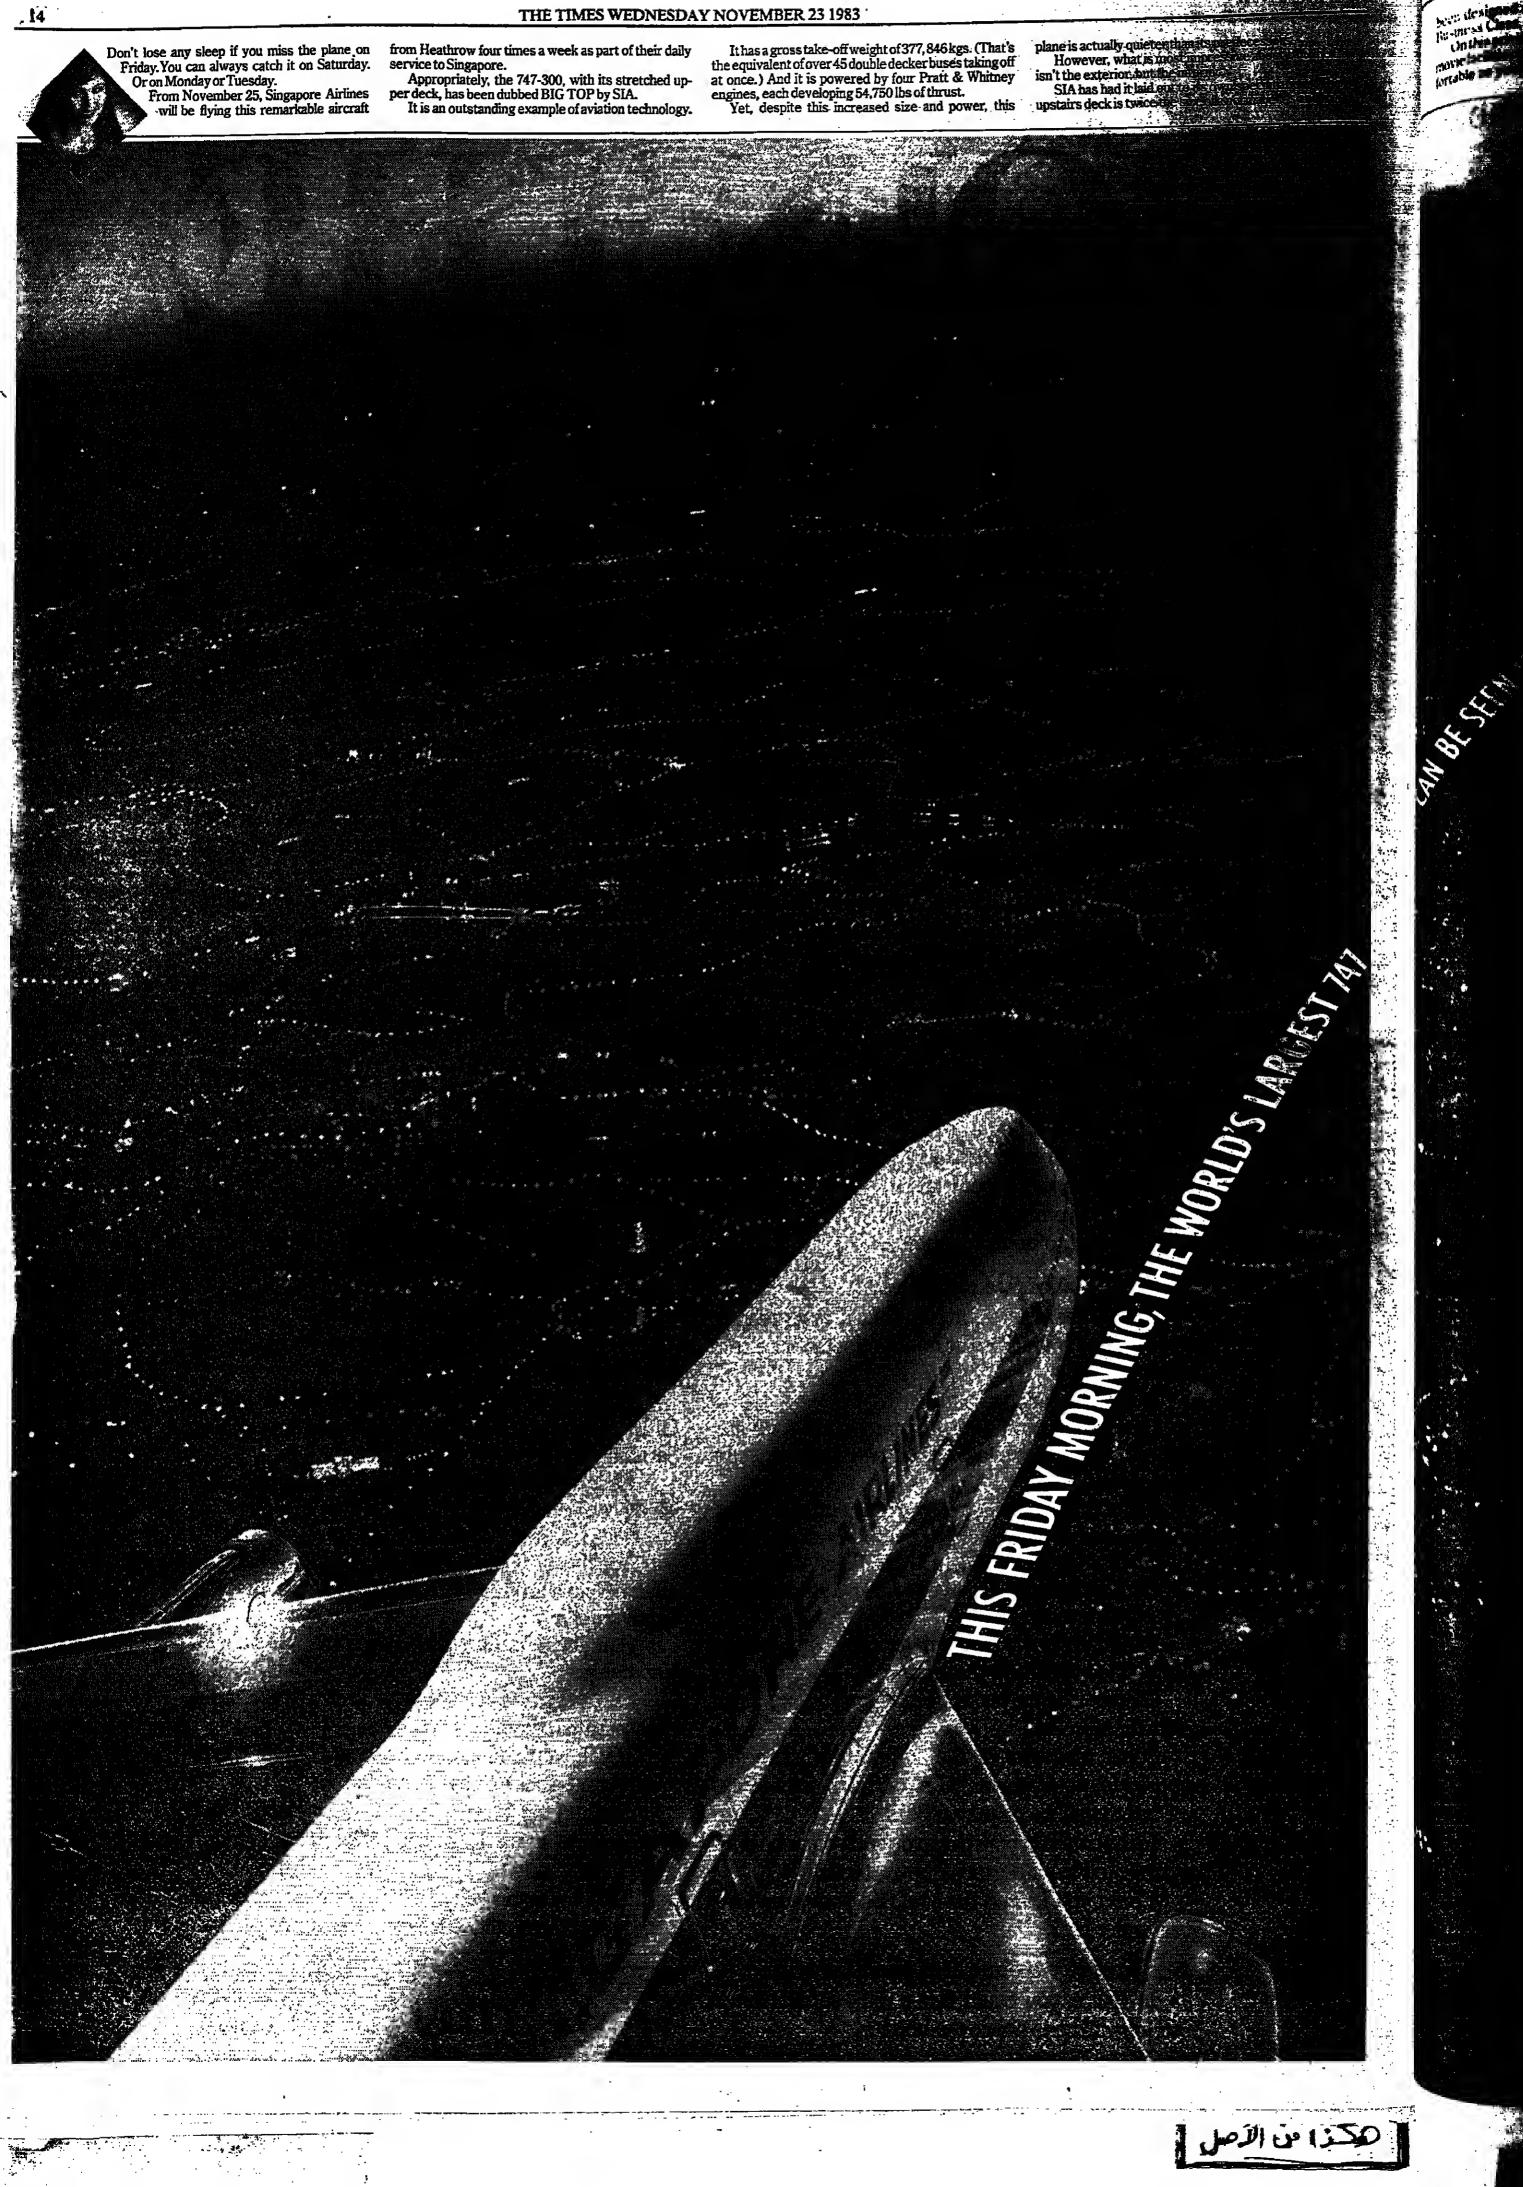

From then on, as an officer in the peace movement, it's up to you.

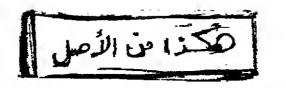

If you would like to know more about a career as an Army officer, please write to:

The Vivian Beaumont Theater at New York's Lincoln Center has failed to live up to high hopes, and is now the subject of bitter dispute: Saraleigh Carney reports

Theatre with a stony silence

Lincoln Center Plaza: light but all too little sweetness

In 1965 the New York Concrete Industry Board cited the Vivian Beaumont Theater at Lincoln Center the best concrete structure erected in New York that year. This was the last unqualified good thing anyone had to say about this building. Now Peter Brook has been tinkering with the acoustics for bis current production of Carmen.

Dark since June 1981, the beleaguered Beaumont's future is the source of an ugly landlord-tenant dispute. Its projected renovation had become the local point of dissatisfaction with the leadership of Richmond Crinkley, best known as the commercial producer of the Broadway hit The Elephant Man.

The Lincoln Center board has just appointed three of its members to meet representatives of the Beaumont board, but in the meantime resolutions adopted in August remain in effect. The present management was stripped of the right to use Lincoln Center's name and of a sbare in the proceeds from the Consolidated

Lincoln Center charges that the first priority of the management should be the production of plays. Segal says that the emphasis on renovation came after a single season "that was less than stellar, which directed attention away from the theatre's artistic purposes". For two years, the "only thing that bas been happening at the Beaumont is talk of renovation", During that time, however, Crinkley has been engaged in two commercial productions, and the appearance of a conflict with running these not-forprofit theatres has been suggested by the press and potential donors. Crinkley compares his commercial ventures with the outside activities of the National's Peter Hall and the RSC's Trevor Nunn, but without their track record.

Both Segal and Crinkley agree that funds should be expended in a prudent fashion, that they have a public responsibility to do so, and that it is time for the Beaumont to move forward. They disagree, in every case, as to how these goals can be accomplished. Segal sees expenditures for staff and unrealized plans as wasteful; Crinkley maintains that you "can't expect donors to support a white elephant, so we have to change the white elephant".

When the Beaumont first opened, disgruntled performer compared its backstage corridors to the Titanic and suggested that the most appropriate use for the main auditorium was to fill it with water and put a whale in it. "Obviously, a big power struggle is going on" observes Edward Albee, the playwright-in-residence. "I don't know what the problem is. But I think there is a problem we don't know about." Whichever side finally emerges as Ahab and which the Great White Whale, the Beaumont saga is shaping up as a tale of Moby Dick proportions.

th of fable THE FINANCE AND INDUSTRY Executive Editor Kenneth Fleet Perfect match that failed to reach the altar

With so many outside suitors chasing so many attractive Stock Exchange damsels, there are bound to be a few disappointments. Nonetheless, yesterday's terse announcement that talks between Exco International and Wood Mackenzie had been abruptly called off is something of a supprise. The two scemed a perfect business match.

Exco, although known as a money broker, has already assembled most of the other pieces needed to construct an interlocking financial services jigsaw. First came the Far East dealing business of the old W.I. Carr stockroking firm. Then Exco bought a 50.1 per cent stake in Gartmore Management, a highly respected investment house controlling £1.5 billion of funds. What it needed was a stockbroking firm with a strong husiness for City institutions and top-rate research backup. Wood Mackenzie, the broker which made its name in North Sea oil and stormed London from Edinburgh, fits that bill perfectly. But a good idea does not make a deal

The talks bad been going on for three months before the two decided it was not going to work. From the buying side, Mr John unn, chief executive of Exco International, has already made plain his distaste for the "fancy" prices he had been quoted by other brokers he sounded out before plying his suit with Wood Mackenzie.

Mr John Chiene of Wood Mackenzie had his own problems. Unlike the stockjobbing firm Akroyd & Smithers, a quoted company, or Vickers da Costa. long a limited partnership with non-Stock Exchange interests, Wood Mackenzie is a more conventional 37-man partnership. Any scheme would have to be tax-efficient and allow for the partners' continuing interests.

These things may well prove a stumbling block for other brokers. As it is, neither side seems put off by the unhappy experience and each will probably pursue alternative deals.

Wood Maekenzie, which ranks seventb overall among stock brokers and has a reputation at least to match, can afford to ponder its ambitions. Exco can look at other brokers with comparable reputations and a strong base of instritutional share and gilt-edged business such as Scrim-geour Kemp-Gee and James Capel or, given its already strong connexions, opt to help build up a more humble member of the Stock Exchange fraternity.

John Gunn: distaste for 'fancy prices'

Meanwhile, the Stock Exchange still has to find out what a straightforward top-class broker may now be worth. Outsiders paid 12 times earnings for Akroyd, more than 15 (on a three year average) for Vickers da Costa. But there is still plenty of haggling to come.

Old habits die hard at Abbey

As expected, there was no dreamlike beginning yesterday for Abbey National's life as a free agent outside the building society cartel.

Having banked some useful publicity from speculation that the society would go it alone with a preemptive cut in the mortgage rate, the Abbey board prudently decided to leave well alone until at least the next meeting in two weeks.

The latest money supply figures had effectively dished hopes of an early cut from the present 11.25 per cent, but the eontinuing unrequited demand for new mortgages – described by the Abbey as stronger than usual at this time of the year - provided another contributory factor. The episode demonstrates clearly enough that breaking loose from the cartel in practice is going to be much harder than many would bave us believe.

P&O shares for Sterling

i7

It looks as though Mr Jeffrey Sterling, the newly appointed chairman of Pen-insula & Oriental, has taken advantage of this week's weakness in the share price.

Word in the market yes-terday suggested he had bought a further 1million to 1.5million shares in P&O through his own brokers and now owns about 4 per cent in the company. This latest buying spree was greeted with a firm "no comment".

But the stake, worth £3.72m, may prove crucial if Trafalgar House decides to pursue its original £290m bid once the Monopolies Commission gives the go-ahead.

The rest of the equity market enjoyed a prosperous day, although turnover re-mained at a low ebb. The FT Index closed at its high for the day 5.3 up at 724.0, helped by the overnight surge on Wall Street.

In the gilt market the issue of a new £500m of "tap" stock has made little impact.

going concern finally seems likely to materialize this week. Quite apart from the facts of the matter, the problem was always going to be that each part of the package depended on another, so that a mammoth amount of talk and coordination has been needed to produce both the chicken and the egg sumultaneously.

The most crucial element was agreement by the International Monetary Fund and Brazil on an economic package which would satisfy enough people for the IMF to resume loan payments.

Since M. Jacques de Lorosière, the IMF's managing director, had made approval more or less a resigning issue, despite Brazil's backsliding on wages, yesterday's crucial IMF meeting in Washington scemed a foregoue couclusion.

In Europe, Mr Fritz Leutwiler, of the Bank for International Settlements, joined with a thumbs-up for the total $11 billion

The latest package of new money and rescheduling to keep Brazil as a financially package, which includes $6.5 billion from commercial banks. The $2.5 billion of government-backed export credits is assured despite Britain's non-participation.

Locking up the debts chain

And the rescheduling talks through the Paris Club have started well enough, though there is still some bargaining over terms to come.

It could all still fall apart. Although more than 300 bankers bave committed all but $500m of their $6.5 billion new money, half of that is formally conditional on the remaining smaller banks.

Organizers like Morgan Guaraity and Lloyds have still to mount a massive exercise in persuasion over the next three weeks, to meet the December deadline. Now Brazil must pay the price. Its national income will fall 6 to 7 per cent this year, trade bas been balanced almost solely by cutting imports yet inflation is still 200 per cent rather than the promised 150 per cent and more action will be needed.

The Arithmetic of the Tax Package (figures in £m 1984-85 prices)

Economic Commentary by Tim Congdon

The VAT 'mistake'

that might help

revive the economy

Addition to revenue from raising VAT

from 15 per cent to 16 per cent from 15 per cent to 20 per cent Loss of revenue from abolishing NIS

Loss of revenue from changing single and wife's earned income allowance by £20 by £350

Official estimate of yield from stamp duties in 1983-84 Probable yield from stamp duties in 1984-85

Productivity pays off at Metal Box

Efficiency is the order of the day at Metal Box. Britain's leading packaging group. Yes-terday's interim figures shawed a dramatic increase in pretax profits from £15.9m to £34.5m. compared with the same stage last year, with almost all the improvement credited in increses in productitivy, particularly in Britain.

The group has coped well with a combination of technoligical change and world re-cession which threatened its existence as the dominant supplier of cans and packaging to the British food and drink industries. More than 12,000 jobs have disappeared leaving Metal Box with 22,000 em-ployees in Britain. The group has been investing between f50m and f60m a year in new plant and equipment, with half of this in Britain.

The result is that the group is making as many cans as it did in 1979 with balf the employees. Factories supplying the drinks industry are working flat out, and there is little slack on the food side

Efforts to contain costs include asking shareholders to vote next year on the appointment of a new firm of auditors to take film a year of husiness now handled by six firms. The PET (plastic bottle) Amersham market is growing at the rate of 15 per cent a year as breweries and soft drinks suppliers take advantage of this cheaper means of packaging. Metal Box elaims to be leader in this field.

His autumn statement has clearly lost him so many friends in the popular press that he must he well on the way to becoming a very good Chancellor of the Exchequer.

But so far he has been responsible only for some measures to control public spending, annonneed in July, and last week's staement. The most encouraging sign would be if the newspapers gave Mr Lawson an even heavier battering after his first Budget, due in March or April. We could then be certain that he would complete his job enjoying universal respect and admiration

The purpose of this article is to propose a change in the structure of taxation so major and controversial that it would give the headline writers a field

Injuries force Celtic to adopt cautious approach

By Clive White

been unspeakable, indeed un-thinkable a manager of Celtic thinkable: a manager of Celtic talking of caution in a European tie? But times have changed since Celtic swept all before them and yesterday David Hay, their manager, admitted as much when he said obout their UEFA cup third round tie at Nottingham Forest: "We can-not be as attack-minded as we not be as attack-minded as we would like and caution will be the name of the game."

After the four goals conceded at St Mirren on Saturday and with the team reshuffled be-cause of injuries, Hay has good reaasoo to think defensively. They have conceded 12 goals in their seven league games away from Parkhead this season. Tonight at the City Ground they are without Proan, their international winger, because of a harmstring initize and Willia a hamstring injury and Willie McStay with a twisted ankle. It is likely that they will hring in Reid at left back and push Sinclair into midfield. McGugan, aged 19, has beeo added to the squad. Also Colquhoun, their new addition from Stirling Albion, is ineligible.

What does not seem to have changed, according to Braio Clough, the Forest manager is the deafening support of their followers. "My players will be up against their tremendous crowd. Indeed, I think they will make more noise at the City Ground than when we play the second leg."

Ten years ago it would have will be unintetugible at Parkbead. Forest expect a crowd of 35,000 tonight and Celtie have already sold their allocation of 11,500. The Scottish club say they could have sold that figure five times over. With a near capacity crowd of 65,000 expected for the return, Celtic could make about £250,000 out of the time which has contended of the tie, which has captured the imagination as any England v Scotland encounter does, and eveo more so because it is between former European Cup champions. With television fees, Celtic believe they will double Forest's income. To avoid Scottish supporters travelling without tickets, and to help Forest's poor financial situation, the match is being televised live in Scotland.

It will be an exacting test for Clough's fledgling side. The performance of Forest's attack, where most of their youth lies, will be crucial. They go forward in a bright, adventurous style vaguely reminiscent of the Celtic of Lennox and Wallace hut there is a lack of substance in their finishing only to be expected in a side still learning. Wigley, playing non-league football only a few months ago, carries much of Forest's hope on the right wing, and I doubt

SQUASH RACKETS Jahan deserves credit for a wise decision By Rex Bellamy

By Rex Bellamy The best player eligible for the men's event has not entered for the British national cham-pionships, to be played at Sheffield from December 9 to 15. Instead, Hidayat Jahan, who ranks third in the world, may compete at Cologne in the West German Open championship, which will take place at the same time. The Sheffield title should therefore go to one of the men whe have contested the last two finals: Gawain Briars, last year's winner, and Philip Kenyoo, the 1981 champion. Kenyoo, the 1981 champion.

Lahore, has lived in England since 1974 and has an English wife. He became a British citizen in July, and last month played for his adopted country in the world team champion-ship in New Zealand. The by opposing schools of thought forthcoming British National within the British game. Some Championship, the first for thought he needed to compete widely experieoced pro-fessional. By nature and back-ground he is better equipped than anyone else to achieve a rapport between the game's dominant coachers: Anglo-Saxon and Pakistani. For all these reasons he has long been one of the most respected and prominent officers of the International Squash Palyers' Association.

This last point identifies one of three obvious causes for Jahan's dilemma. The ISPA consider that the Sheffield Prize Fund - a total of £8,000 for the men, of which the winner takes $\pounds 1,350$ – is less than it should be for the national championship. Should such an influential ISPA officer as Jahan condone this alleged injustice by competing? It could reasonably be argued that the title is more important than the money and that in the present ecocomic climate the prize fund is as much as can be him than it does on a vocal expected. But the ISPA have a minority who want to use it to policy and to see some extent advance this or that petty point Jahan represent that policy.

Jahan: best player

The other, more pressing Championship, the first tor which Jahan has been eligible, put him in a difficult position. Jahan is a genial, sensitive and responsible man and a widely experieoced pro-should be restricted to players of British parentage - a line of thinking that must exclude Jahan. In this situation there was no way in which he could satisfy everyone.

Jahan has already proved beyond doubt that he is a better player than Briars or Kenyon. In this respect his positioo recalls that of Jonah Barriogton in 1980. Barrington had con-flicting allegiances (Irish, Welsh and English) but Primarily represented Ireland. He had no great incentive to become British champion and his cree British champion and his creek was winding down anyway, But Barrington was needled into competing in Sheffield in order to prove that at the age of 39 he was still British number one. He did so, beating Kenyon and Briars in consecutive matches.

All things considered, Johan's decisioo reflects more credit on of view.

Barrington: refuses to be shackled by conventions

Dramatic life that is stranger than fiction

The astonishing story of Jonah Barrington, one of the greatest of all British sportsmen, has been plainly but admirably told in Jonah, by Ross Reyburn and Michael Emery (188 smartly produced pages published by J M Dent at £8.95). The word "plainly" is a compliment to the ambors' discretion. They realized that such improbably dramatic material did not need doesing up in finger whereas dressing up in fancy phrases. The book bears the sub-title "official biography" because Bar-rington himself was closely associated with its preparation and editing. The ring of truth resounds throughout, as this reviewer can personally testify. But truth is indeed stranger than fiction. Jonah is reminiscent of Antonia Fraser's biography of Mary Queen of Scots in that, had it been fictional, any publisher might reasonably have rejected the book on the grounds that its story was incredible.

Linar HS SROTY was incredible. Let us consider merely the bare bones of the tale. Barrington had a nervous breakdown at Cheitenham College and later went much of the way towards becoming an alcoholic before he was sent down from before he was sent down from Trinity University. But he transformed himself into an ascetic and a formed himself into an ascence and a world champion in spite of the fact that he made a late start in competitive squash and, except in terms of character, was not particularly gifted to excel at it.

As the anthors point out: "Most people are congenitally unable to change their character after having passed through their formative years and it is one of Jonah's more years and it is the of solution shows impressive achievements that he managed to do so." Barrington changed himself physically, too. The details of his new life-style and severe regimen of training and practice make awesome reading.

He was tampering with nature, hallenging the apparent frontiers of bis strength and stamina and skill. He went too far: and in his middle 30s was sharply reminded that, although he had asked oo more of his body than was possible, he had asked more than was wise. Physically, he was suddenly in decline.

At the peak of his career this At the peak of this carbon this extraordinary, many-sided man had a romantic but briefly scandalous liaison with his presnt wife, whose first marriage was then breaking down. A worrying challenge of a different kind was his brittle on-court relationship with an Austra-lian rival, Cameron Nancarrow. This culminated in a Johannesburg shower room when Barrington waded into Nancarrow with his fists. Barrington respects the conven-tions but refuses to be shackled by them. He has mostly lived his life on the side of the angels but has never been entirely free from the devil within. The authors tell the truth about that. Barrington has qualities found only in great men -flaws included. He was and is that uncommon creature, a practica visionary: a man who can dream dreams and make them happen and, at the same time, open windows in the minds of everyone around him. The seeds were always there planted deeply in history. Barring-ton's genteel but often eccentric family had links with the sea, the Army, politics, and possibly the Welsh princes. He probably in-herited strength of character from his Welsh mother and a quirky nature from his Irish father. The latter was a retired Army officer and former Fascist sympathiser whose domestic diversions included an armoury, a model railway, and a planted deeply in history. Barring domestic diversions included all armoury, a model railway, and a collection of toy soldiers - all housed in a secret room concealed behind a bookcase. Barrington senior was also a volubly stimular-

ing talker and an enthusiastic military historian with an obsessive veneration for Napoleon. As you may reasonably assume from all this, the Barrington story is peopled by unusual characters and enlivened by strange stories. The authors have bound all the threads neatly together and, in the process have achieved a balanced portrays of an extraordinary man. The book begins well an ends

The book begins well an ends even better, with a summing up that includes an absorbing insight into what Barrington and his chief rival, Geoff Hunt, thought of each other. There is an implied distinction between the most successful player, Hunt, the greatest - Hashim Khan, Azam Khan, or Barrington? This Barrington biography has the check to end with a hint that Azam may have been the greatest of them al. Full marks for impar-them all. Full marks for impartiality. The anthors have not written a great book: but they have written a good book about the most remarkable man I have ever known.

Residential property/Christopher Warman

Covered – with thatch Owning a thatched property, however delightfull it looks, is ont always as comfortable as the bedi of roses invariably planted optside the front door.

A year ago, a cigarette end carelessly thrown over a hedge landed on the thatched roof of a cottage in the Newbury area standing at a lower level and burnt it out. If it is not that sort of risk, which can cause such destruction, the humble field mice can be almost as much of a menace. Not that they are wilfully destructive creatures. It is simply that they rather enjoy a meal of plastic conduit covering, and when they have bitten in through it is only a matter of time before they bits the bare wire. The electric shock does not harm them apparently, but the fire that can follow leaves its own devastation. Actidents such as these are bound to have an

Accidents such as these are bound to have an effect on the level of risk that the providers of insurance and mortgages are prepared to share.

There are an estimated 50,000 thatched properties of all types in the United Kingdom, ranging in value from as low as £20,000 to £250,000 and more, and their owners have traditionally had to pay a great deal more to insure them than constructions of brick and tile.

Fortunately for those who own or want thatched properties, there are firms which specialize in this market. One such is CGA (Insurance Brokers) Ltd, who recognized the real need for a property designed thatch insurance in the late 1960s, largely in response to enquiries from members of the Country Gentlemen's Association

Non memory of the Country Gentlemen's Association. Mr Colin Hill, general insurance director of the CGA, mys that insurance companies generally looked on thatch with a jaundiced eye. "We decided the rates were too high and set out to prove it. The result is that we have been able to prove it. The result is that we have been able to bring the rates down to £3 per £1,000, half the previous rate." That compares with £1.50 per £1,000 for brick-constructed buildings, but is still a great advance on the situation a few years ago.

The main requirements for insurance are to ensure that the electrical wiring and chimney constructions are in sound condition, and that the roof rulef is maintained to an acceptable adard. After all, it costs £2,000 to replace the

VALLEY

VVILLI LILLEVIL thatch en a modest courage, rising to £20,000 or more on a briger property. Evidence of the pride in ownership and the condition of thatched property is indicated by the fact that CGA are able to accept the majority of proposals. Proof is that the value of thatched properties covered by CGA exceeds £300m. The attractions of a thatched home remain strong, notwithstanding the difficulties, and there are plenty on the market, ranging from the cheap (which means they need modernizing) by the yry expensive.

cheap (which means they need modernizing) is the very expensive. Two in the former category come up for auction today through the Andover (Hants) office of Pearsons. The first is Bridle Cottage, in a conservation area in the hamlet of Ibuhorpe, Hants. Between Andover and Newbury, Bridle Cottage is partly thatched and partly tiled and is, in estate agent's language, clearly ripe for modernization. It has three bedrooms and is likely to fetch £40,000 to £45,000. The second is Church Earm Cottage likely to fetch £40,000 to £45,000. The second is Church Farm Cottage, Middleton, Longparish, Hants, close by the River Test. Again in need of some moderniza-tion, the cottage has been re-thatched recently, has a beamed ceiling to the ground floor living room, and has three bedrooms. The guide price is £45,000.

is £45,000. For something completely different, there is a thatched cottage at Kingsbury in north-west London, within easy reach of central London. A few minutes' walk from the Jubilee Line, they cottage - for sale through Bairstow Eves's, Kentoo office - was built in the 1920s by Ernest Trowbridge. Rethatched in 1980, Midcot Cottage has bedroom windows winking out from thatch cychrows, exposed beams, and a 20 foot living noom with a sort of minstrel's gallery. With two bedrooms and a secluded carden, is on offer at bedrooms and a secluded garden, it is on offer at £75,000.

Fox and Sons and Sandoe Fox and Sons h a large number of thatched properties on their books in the south and west. Court Farm House Bratton, near Westbury, Wilts, is believed to date from the fifteenth century, passed into the Seymour family in 1540 and later became part of a toyal manor under Queen Mary. This three or four-bedroom house, part brick, part stone, with part-timbered walls, is priced at £87,500 (Sandoe Fox, Westhury) Fox, Westbury).

The Thatched Cottage, Church Hill, Charing Heath, near Ashford, Kent, which is on offer at about £95,000 through the Canterbury office of Strutt and Parker.

Action on Divided by time, united by violence and grief divers Kennedys trying to honour the memory stop pipe

By Mark Rosselli

An injunction was granted yesterday against the Greenpeace conservation group, whose divers have been trying to block underseas discharge pipe exits from the nuclear processing plant at Sellafield, Cumbria, formerly Windscale.

But yesterday it appeared that the protesters might ignore the High Court injunction, and continue their efforts to stop radioactive waste from being pumped into the Irish Sea.

Greeupeace sent in 15 volum teers on the former trawler Cedarlea after a radioactive slick from the pipe drifted ashore and contaminated 200 yards of beach at the weekend.

Throughout yesterday, teams of divers searched for the two pipe exits that protrude from the sea bed t1/2 miles offshore. They were foiled by poor underwater visibility. As they dived, the Cedarlea was watched by the seascan, a vessel belonging to British Nuclear Fuels.

British Nuclear Fuels reacted swiftly to the Greenpeace swifty to the checkpeakers action. The pipe the protesters seek to block discharges mil-lions of gallons of processed and cooling water each day as well as radioactive waste. Although there are sufficient onshore storage tanks to cope with the flow for a few days, a blockage would eventually force the plant to close.

Mr Roy Pilling, director of operations at Sellafield, said vesterday that he could not allow the operation of the pipes to be interfered with.

He said: "It would create a hazard, and we would have to take remedial action. I am concerned at what is happening, because I thought Greenpeace were reasonable people who were merely taking samples near the pipelines.

An unrepentant Greenpeace spokesman said yesterday: "As far as we know, we have had no official information that an injunction has been served. We have not been contacted about it, so as far as we are concerned, il does not exist. Mr Peter Wilkinson, a Greeneace director aboard the Cedarlea, spoke to The Times last night by ship to shore radio, and predicted that, if the organization's trustees decided

of JFK From Nicholas Ashford Washington

In brilliant antumn san members of the Kennedy family yesterday gathered in Washington and later at their home in Hyannis Port to honour the memory of Presi dent John Fitzgerald Kenned: on the twentieth auniversy o his assassingtion in Dallas. At an early-morning privat ceremony at Arlington cem etery, before the gates were opened to the public, Kennedy': brother, sisters, nephews and nieces, together with a few close friends, scattered yellor and white roses at his grave

Later, the family was joined by President Reagan, senior Congressional leaders and survivors of his "best and brightest" administration at a nationally-televised special means at the Hole mass at the Holy Trinity church in Georgetown, where Kennedy worshipped during his-one thousand days in the White Ho

A moving eulogy was given by Scantor Edward Kennedy, the former President's younger brother and now head of the Kennedy "clan".

Senator Kennedy, the only survivor of four brothers, said the late President had "every gift but the length of years. What he did and believed in will endure and inevitably it will prevail. He made America young again and the world seemed new again."

Musical accompaniment was by Grace Bumbry, of the Metropolitan Opera and the violinist Issac Stern.

Caroline Kennedy was the only member of the late President's own family present at the service. His widow, Jacqueline, was with his mother, Rose, aged 93, at Hyannis Port, Massachusetts and his son John was in India, where he is doing graduate work.

In a statement Mr Reagan described Kennedy;s assassination as "one of the most tragic episodes in our nation's his-tory". Kennedy was dedicated to a strong America and the pursuit of the best for all its citizens

After the service, family members attended a memorial to defy the High Court injunc-tion, the ship's four divers would locate the two pipelines River, before flying to Hyannis tourism policy. One's suspicions were immediately aroused. Why does tourism need a government policy? One could understand why a hotel, a museum, or a guest house, needed a tourist policy. But what does tourism require of government - other than that government helps bring about that general prosperity in which all enterprise, including tourism, might flourish?

As Mr Lamont rose yesterday, it seemed likely that we were about to hear what tourists to these islands soon learn is the anthentic folk instrument of our nation: the gentle, but steady, playing of the quango. So it proved. "The Government's main instrument for encouraging tourism is the statutory tourist boards," said Mr Lamont. Initially the quango ac-companies a singer called a "minister". Later, a "chair-man" and "board members" ioin in the mery-making the join in the merry-making, the whole entertainment sometimes coming to a climax with one of several variations which include the "supplementary estimate" or alternatively the "further claim on the Public Sector Borrowing Requirement".

Mr Lamont began the fun esterday by standing at the despatch and singing: "The Government's main instrument for encouraging tourism is the statutory tourist boards." He cut a picturesque figure in the minister's tra-ditional costume of dark blue

Mr region and whose separate Lamont said there were to be Left and Right performances to an exciting climax with: "I am therefore asking the British Tourist Authority to transfer its remaining UK activities to the national boards, so that it may concentrate on its prime responsibility: to promote Britain overseas. I am asking the British Tourist Authority and the English Tourist Board to seek shared accommodation, to merge certain common services, and in consultation with the Scottish Tourist Board and the Wales Tourist Board, to climinate duplication in their publication programmes."

This climax contained an interesting variant from tra-dition. When a minister starts a quango, it normally results in more duplication - not less. in more duplication - not tess. Mr Lamount appeared to be attempting nothing less than a quango which saved money. Thus he seems to be one of those colossal historical figures who takes a folk art and forces it into a new form: in this case the non-duplicating quango. Only history can tell if he actually succeeds. Some anthropologists were sceptical yesterday. One of them, Mr Dennis Skinner, the Labour member for Bolsover. demanded: "When these quan-gos have been placed into the jiesaw, is it going to increase or decrease public expenditure?" Mr Lamont made the huge claim that he did not expect the
